

A Tree Talk by David Dunlap in 1991

The path of life can be viewed as a long series of forking roads. At any point along our journey we will be faced with a choice about which direction to go. The best we can do is: (1) Consider the options: weigh the pros and cons and the possible consequences. (2) Listen to our feelings — give them credit. Allow them to guide you when they know the way. (3) And finally, commit to one of the paths. For Robert Frost, the path less traveled made all the difference. Rejoice in the splendor of what you encountered along your journey and don't worry about what you might have seen if you'd made that left back in Albuquerque. Focus on where you are today, what you hear and see around you. And believe in yourself. Have the confidence to take charge of your life and make things happen. Don't wait for someone else to live your life for you. The rewards are immeasurable. Take the advice of Nike: Just do it!
