A Tree Talk by Jon Meredith in 1991

You have to think how the actions which come out of your set of priorities will affect others. Your priorities must be those which are the best for you. They should be kept in perspective with each other as well as with the rest of your life. In addition, a strong, established, clearly arranged set of morals can provide you with the ability to make the proper decisions. The final piece of advice I would give you is to use your own judgment. Only you truly know what is a priority for you. Open your eyes, look around you. What is honestly the best for you? If we follow this advice, stop and think, and keep things in perspective, this fantastically busy world in which we live can be a simpler, easier place.
